

ELIZABETHANS ON BOARD BIG LINER TITANIC

Elizabeth Daily Journal

Tuesday 16 April 1912

[The preceding paragraphs of this article can be found through the summary pages for the Renouf/Jefferys family, the Carter family and the Peacock family, in that order.]

From early this morning when the first dispatches began to come over the wires the Journal office was besieged with inquiries about the fate of the mammoth steamship. In many cases the inquiries were prompted only by curiosity, but in others keen anxiety for the safety of relatives or friends who were believed to be aboard the ill-fated ship led to the queries.

Miss Esther Gracie Ogden, of 232 South Broad street, this city, sought to learn the fate of the Titanic's passengers. Her cousin, Archibald Gracie, of Washington, was on the vessel returning from abroad, where he went five weeks ago for his health. Mr. Gracie's wife spent the day in New York trying vainly to learn his fate. It is feared that he went down with the majority of the male passengers on the Titanic.

Courtesy of Mark Baber

Copyright Encyclopedia Titanica - www.encyclopedia-titanica.org 1996-2012 and third parties (ref: #2448)
URL : <http://www.encyclopedia-titanica.org/elizabethans-board-big-liner-titanic-4.html>

PDF edition provided for personal reference only.

